Laser Dentistry Laser teeth whitening has been clinically proven to be safe, easy, and quick. Dentists in Tulsa and Oklahoma in general sometimes misunderstand the concept of laser teeth whitening. They ask if it's safe, and they think that it's the same as the powerful laser used in dental offices. Some dentists even use a lower power with "laser gel" on your teeth and call it laser whitening. They are wrong, and you should tell them that. There are several factors that make it unsafe to use a stronger laser in a room filled with water. When you use a laser in an office-like room with its high water potential, there is always a risk of the laser operator being injured by the high-powered laser beam they are trying to direct onto the patient's teeth. Lasers are also fragile, because they are not made of the kind of sturdy, heavy materials that are in a typical dental office. The medical lasers that are used in dental offices often weigh anywhere from ten to 100 pounds. They are also usually bench-top machines, meaning that they can't be moved around a room like a dental chair. Also, using a high-powered laser in a dental office is dangerous because of the risk that you could get a direct eye or skin exposure to the laser beam. The best lasers for teeth whitening are located in a dental office, where they use water-free materials (like the in office lasers we sell). LaseVeritas dental lasers are designed to operate without

The aim of the present study was to examine the expression of adipocyte fatty acid-binding protein (AFABP) in human adipose tissue in humans with type 2 diabetes. The AFABP expression was measured in subcutaneous adipose tissue by immunohistochemistry and Western blot in 16 normal (N) subjects and 24 patients with type 2 diabetes (N-diabetes). The N-diabetes group had significantly higher plasma glucose and fasting serum insulin than the N group. In addition, AFABP protein expression was increased in the N-diabetes group as revealed by Western blot. Furthermore, immunohistochemical staining indicated that the number of AFABP-positive cells was significantly increased in the adipose tissue of the N-diabetes group compared with the N group. These results suggest that the increased expression of AFABP in adipose tissue may contribute to the development of hyperinsulinemia and hyperglycemia.
